

2 child-care centers will remain open

May 18, 2009

Baltimore Mayor Sheila Dixon has decided not to close two child care centers, reversing a cut proposed in her initial 2010 spending plan. The mayor determined Friday that federal grant money can be used to keep the centers in Northwood and Waverly open. The centers were among the services the city planned to cut to fill a $65 million gap in the budget that begins in July. The two centers serve 85 children and cost $126,000 yearly to operate.
